

Travel Bonus

I.

Identify the world cities depicted in these satellite and aerial views.

1.

2.

3.

4.

5.

6.

7.

8.

9.

II.

Match the international airport codes listed below with the airplane most likely to get you there.

10. FRA      —
11. GRU      —
12. JFK      —
13. CDG      —

14. CAI      —
15. SYD      —
16. NRT      —

A.

B.

C.

D.

E.

F.

G.

III. Famous Voyages of Fact and Fiction

For each of the famous journeys referenced below, tell us who did the traveling and (briefly) describe the route.

14. Out of 87 original travelers, only 48 survived. Their ordeal has become synonymous with one particularly unsavory aspect of that survival.
15. If he thought the decade-long war was bad, just wait until he tries sailing home. Possibly the most enduring journey on this list.
16. This voyage was mandated by an imperial order and complicated by a lodging shortage upon arrival, not to mention the delicate state of health of one of the travelers.
17. Before ever setting foot in Yosemite, this traveler planned to go to South America. A bad case of malaria prevented him from making it that far, but at least his impressive attempt landed him a book deal.
18. We never got to watch this particular trip. Then again, the traveler didn't see much of it, either, as he was in a state of deep hibernation at the time. That's probably just as well, given that it started with an old friend's betrayal and ended with a temporary case of blindness.
19. The original captain of this voyage died about halfway through, but the expedition still got named after him. Despite the death of over two hundred crew members, it's technically considered a success.
20. This traveler managed to survive the trip, though only because he had two of his best friends killed in his place. Of course, this minor bit of murder pales in comparison to all the carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts that came before and after.
21. A single journey won this traveler a cash prize from a French hotelier and turned him into an overnight celebrity. His success also marked the first time the French foreign office ever flew the American flag to salute someone who was not a head of state.
22. As with so many voyages, it's not the destination but the journey that counts. A young Cambridge student signed on as a gentleman's companion, hoping to put off his vows as a clergyman. The journal he kept would lead to one of history's most earth shattering scientific theories.

23. This voyage took place on a windy day in December. The instrument of travel was severely damaged, but it has since been restored and now resides in the Smithsonian.
24. This traveler probably should have stopped for a break. Νενικήκαμεν!
25. There may be no man alive who remembers that day and year, but most of us have heard of this traveler. He wasn't the only one to undertake the journey, but he does get most of the credit.
26. Miraculously, only one death occurred on this voyage, and that was due to appendicitis. When an important decision had to be made halfway through, each of the travelers were given an equal voice regardless of rank, race, and gender—though presumably the baby didn't get a vote.
27. This journey took a whole generation and was punctuated by plagues, encounters with poisonous snakes, seductions, espionage, and the watery destruction of the occasional army.
28. There are still those who don't believe this journey took place. It won the three travelers a tongue-in-cheek Hugo award.
29. Frightened by financial difficulties, this notorious traveler took the coward's way out. According to legend, he brought some reading material with him.
30. This journey was stalled first by a snowstorm and then by the brutal murder of one of the passengers. The travelers made up an unusually international group, coming from America, Britain, Italy, Russia, Sweden, Germany, France, and, most notably, Belgium.
31. This traveler was hired to leave his comfortable home and achieve a lucky number. After going there and back again, he returned with a fortune and an excellent story for his memoirs.
32. This voyage was begun on a bet and ended with a false arrest, a wedding, and a slight calendar error.
33. These two travelers set out to cover a motorcycle race for a sporting magazine and got caught up in the counter-culture along the way.

34. Every year, millions participate in this at-least-once-in-a-lifetime journey.
35. This journey is also a regular event, though it's been widely protested both because of the circumstances under which the tradition originated and because of this year's final destination.
36. This motley crew of warriors set out on a mission from God. Despite surviving any number of mishaps, they were foiled at last by an abrupt and anticlimactic police action.
37. You may have read of the remarkable explorations of a Norwegian named Sigerson.
38. Last question, I presume?