Super Bonus 1: The Internet is Ruining All Culture

Part I- Livejournal

The cesspool of all emo personal revelations. Even legitimately meaningful and tender revelations somehow gain an air of emotional exhibitionism when posted to LJ, and yet, we'll all keep writing ours anyway. We wonder: if the Internet had been around longer, how might it have been used by famous people?

Go to <http://www.livejournal.com> and go to the following five mystery blogs: suitesuitemyst0, suitesuitemyst1, suitesuitemyst2, suitesuitemyst3, and suitesuitemyst4. Each one was "written" by a famous real or fictional person, referencing the well-known events of his/her life. For each LJ, there will be ten identifications you'll need to make, including the author of the blog.

Part II- IMized Lyrics

IMspeak is well on its way to corrupting the English language irrevocably, and we predict its next casualty will be song lyrics. We've taken 25 songs below and shown what they would look like in an IMspeak world--in some cases merely recounting the song's basic narrative arc in paraphrased IMs, and in others more directly translating the lyrics into the world of emoticons and abbreviations. Name the songs and their primary performers or writers.

Part III- WSO

Simultaneously a bastion of truth amidst the chaos of campus and a locus of its most immature rantings.

The Blogs

You've all spent hours and hours procrastinating by reading over the WSO blogs, and we're sure that by now you've all gotten a feel for the personalities who regularly populate it. Identify the ten Williams students posting in the hypothetical thread below.

Thread: Is Wesleyan a Better School Than Williams??

76. We need to catch up with the new geo-techno-enviro-scopes being developed at Wesleyan to finally become carbon-neutral. I will introduce a measure regarding this at CC next Wednesday. Also, interesting link: <http://www.nuclearweaponsarebad.org>

77. A few questions, intended not as an attack on your (implied) arguments but as a sincere investigation of the issues they raise. 1. To what extent is carbon neutrality really useful? If we were forced to choose between carbon neutrality, letting billions of starving people eat, or killing puppies, which would you choose? 2. Do you think nuclear weapons are a priori bad, or only in their use against particular targets? 3. Is the fact that I'm taller than everyone who posts on these boards relevant to this discussion? Okay, going back to listen to Jay-Z, Blackstar and a bunch of other people who belie my image as a very white hardline conservative.

78. Your argument is entirely based on the kind of American capitalist system that inundates of culture with unnecessary consumer products and mass advertising until the public no longer has any desires of its own separate from its corporate overlords. Read Horkheimer's Eclipse of Reason and listen to Raw Power, and all will be made clear.

79. As I was discussing with David Kane the other day, by envisioning our planet as a Hilbert space and applying the Hahn-Banach theorem to the various functions of carbon emissions, we can conclude that the Earth polar ice caps will melt in correlation to a quartic (!) curve quite similar to the college's own emission patterns. Obviously, that's a problem.

80. I've been too busy listening to Tool and overusing my Wii to care about whatever all of you are talking about. And where are my puppies?

81. Most days I'd jump in here, but I've been up the last 48 hours planning KAOS (PS-bump KAOS!). Feh.

82. You know how we can stop pollution? By killing people who fart on planes and try to cover it up by lighting matches. That one still pisses me off.

83. While it's important to consider the extent of our ecological footprint and the many ways that we could match up to Wesleyan's performance, we should also consider that a group of six five-year-olds could kick the asses of any person at both colleges in an hour flat. (Additionally, every band mentioned in this thread so far sold out decades ago--how many times must I tell people to start listening to some Sigur Ros before anyone listens?)

84. MESHUGGGGGGGGGGAHHHHHHHHHHHHHH!!!!11!!!

85. Ummm...anyone want to talk about Ravel instead? /end thread-jack //didn't care much anyway

The WSO Servers

What is the name of the WSO server that...
